Brittany Wells
Chief Diversity and Inclusion Officer

Brittany Wells has been the chief diversity and inclusion officer at Uber since July 2018. She came to Uber with more than 12 years of experience in the field. Since her arrival, Wells has put that experience to use by planning numerous initiatives geared towards increasing Uber's racial and gender diversity statistics at the corporate and regional levels.

Before coming to Uber, Wells was the chief diversity officer at Lyft. After five years at Lyft, she briefly moved to an identical position at Turo before moving to China to work as a diversity and racial integration consultant at Didi Chuxing. Wells credited this experience for giving her the tools and experience needed to help make Uber a more diverse and inclusive place to work.

Outside of Uber, Wells is the chair of the National Congress of Black Women, Inc. and serves on the Harvard University President's Diversity and Inclusion Commission.

Wells completed her bachelor's degree in management sciences at University of California, Los Angeles. She earned her MBA from Harvard University, where she specialized in workplace diversity and graduated with distinction.
